Sources Sought Synopsis Sample
APR 2019

HUD's field economists gather and review a wide range of housing and macroeconomic data to analyze market conditions and assess the demand for additional housing. Easily accessible data of good quality is crucial in analyzing market conditions and to forecast demand. EMAD assists other federal agencies, such as the Department of Agriculture's Rural Development Housing and Community Facilities Program and the Department of Defense's multifamily housing construction projects. Finally, HUD also publishes many of EMAD's housing studies and reports to provide information to builders, lenders, developers, planners, economic development officials, real estate professionals, local government officials, academics, and the general public. EMAD publishes the results of its housing analyses in the quarterly U.S. Housing Market Conditions report, Housing Market Profiles (HMPs) and the individual Comprehensive Housing Market Analysis reports (comprehensives), posted on the HUD User website (<http://www.huduser.gov>).
